

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A non-encapsulated choline compound is fed to a ruminant animal by first dissolving the choline compound in drinking water and then providing the drinking water to the ruminant animal in a sufficient quantity to provide an effective amount of choline to the ruminant animal. Most of the choline compound bypasses the rumen.